

managing the sales process

SKILLSHOT™ clinics

Are your decision-making dates endlessly creeping?

Are you finding it difficult to pin your customer down to a decision?

In the current market, customers scrutinise buying decisions more closely and become more risk-averse resulting in a longer decision-making process. Applying pressure to force a decision does not work; if anything, it will make the situation worse. The answer? To rigorously manage your sales process.

Under these conditions, an effective sales person will focus on managing the whole sales process, not just the closing stages. Success will depend on gathering upfront the information that is critical to managing the sales process: the customer's decision-making process and timescales, budget allocation, critical events, influencers and decision-makers.

In 2 hours you will

- Define your sales process and average sales cycle
- Learn how to identify the customer's decision-making process and associated timescales
- Develop the art of managing the sales process to your timescales
- Learn how to maintain momentum and gain the customer's commitment at each stage in the sales process
- Use non-pressurised closing techniques to bring a sale to a conclusion
